The Parsons House is a two storey house of stone, five bays fronting south, with a two storey rear or north wing, also of stone, four bays in length, of contemporaneous construction, and a two storey, three bay east wing, added ca. 1954. Flush chimneys are at each original gable end, now of stone, but originally of brick, as shown by early photographs of the house. One storey shed-roofed porches flank the rear wing, and extend across the three center bays of the principal front.

Windows are 6/6, withlouvred blinds. Granite lintels support the masonry above openings. The wall strfaces are stuccoed under the porches Originally, the wide cornice terminated at the gable ends with big returns, and extended up the rakes; cornice-work proportions have been reduced, with barge boards replacing the rake cornice.

In the center hall, the principal stair rises, with landings, to the third floor. Its walmit rail is supported by turned newels of moderate proportions, which are, in fact, the original, massive newels, reduced in proportion ca. 1954; an unaltered newel survives at the third floor level. A single room flanks the hall on either side. There is no stone wall between the main house and the rear wing, except in the basement storey. The second floor plan is similar to the first.

The entire interior has been refinished, and partially replanned, especially in the rear wing, due to an extreme deterioration of the original, as shown in the photographs. Original window trim survives at most windows, and the replacement work is in the general character of the original, although the mantels are reproductions of an earlier style. Windows in the principal rooms have splayed, paneled jambs. Original doors in use have six raised panels, with applied cyma mouldings, he the smaller panels being near the center, characteristically mid-18th century.

Transcripts of early documents, said to relate to this house, indicate a construction date of 1860, a date consistent with remaining original fabric and the early photographs.

Immediately north of the rear wing stands a stone smoke house, on the gable roof of which is a wooden belfry, Some distance to its east stands a stone privy with a pyramidal roof, 8 feet square.

The early photographs show a ruined stone and log house which stood west of the smoke house, or northwest of the house. It may have preeated the present house.
